11:00PM Woodsongs - The Wood Brothers/The Claudettes

The Wood Brothers began as something of a side project between Chris Wood (Medeski Martin & Wood) and brother Oliver (Tinsley Ellis and King Johnson) in 2006. Adapting the blues, folk and other roots-music sounds they loved as kids into their own evocative sound and twining their voices in the sort of high-lonesome harmony blend for which sibling singers are often renowned, it's become quite clear that The Wood Brothers have indeed become the main act. With the addition of drummer Jano Rix, the band have become a stalwart on the Americana scene and "Masters of Soulful Funk" (Paste Magazine). Paradise is the band's fifth album and it's their most sophisticated and rocking work to date. The Claudettes create their own fanatical fusion of blues and soul-jazz-like Ray Charles on a punk kick. Think The White Stripes and Black Keys brandish with a piano instead and fronted by Nigerian-American singer/dancer Yana who sings in French. File under: post-burlesque? Neo-vaudeville? Cosmic cartoon music? You've never seen a band quite like this.

Hawaiian kapa is one of the most beautiful art forms in the Pacific. In ancient Hawai'i, kapa, or bark cloth made from the wauke plant (Broussonetia papyrifera), was used for clothing, bedding, the wrapping of precious iwi (ancestor's bones), important ceremonies, and a myriad of other purposes, making it an integral part of everyday life in Hawaiian society. Ka Hana Kapa is the story of kapa making in Hawai'i, as told by these dedicated kapa practitioners and their students, who have given new life to this intricate cultural practice. The film features interviews with kapa practitioners Marie McDonald, Roen Hufford, Dalani Tanahy, Moana Eisele, Dennis Kana'e Keawe, Ka'iulani de Silva, and Eric Enos. Ka Hana Kapa also showcases the thrilling appearance of Halau O Kekuhi led by kumu hula Nalani Kanaka'ole attired in original kapa made specifically for the Halau at the opening of the 2011 Merrie Monarch Festival.

8:00PM Grand Coulee Dam: American Experience

Grand Coulee was more than a dam; it was a proclamation. In the wake of the Great Depression, America turned from private enterprise to public works - not simply to provide jobs, but to restore faith. The ultimate expression of Franklin Roosevelt's New Deal, Grand Coulee played a central role in transforming the Northwest; it was the largest hydroelectric power producing facility in the world when it was completed in March 1941. After WWII, a vast irrigation project made possible by the dam helped turn the barren deserts of central Washington into rich farmland. But the dam prevented access to one of the greatest salmon rivers in the world. Deprived of the salmon - their most important resource - the native people who lived along the Columbia witnessed a profound cultural decline. Featuring the men and women who lived and worked at Grand Coulee and the native people whose lives were changed, as well as historians and engineers, this film explores how the tension between technological achievement and environmental impact hangs over the project's legacy. To mark the anniversary, this film travels back Sobibor with the last remaining survivors to reveal their extraordinary story of courage, desperation and determination. The film uses brutally honest drama-reconstruction and first hand testimony to reveal the incredible escape story. The multi-layered plot unfolds like a Hollywood blockbuster -- from the last-minute change to the escape plan forced by an unexpected arrival of a train load of SS soldiers, to the systematic luring of individual camp guards to separate locations and different, highly creative deaths, yet every terrible and inspiring moment of this story is absolutely true.

7:00PM Egypt Beyond The Pyramids - Cairo, Undercover

For three months, adventure filmmaker and author Karin Muller traveled alone across Egypt - living with Cairo's garbage collectors, drinking tea with camel sellers, and fasting through the blistering heat of Islam's Holy Month. Karin begins her journey in a Cairo slum among Egypt's 50,000 Coptic Christian garbage collectors. Cairo recycles a higher percentage of its refuse than any other city in the world. For two weeks Karin sorts garbage amidst the flies and pigs. The Zabaleen take her into their homes, teach her how to survive off Cairo's waste and show her just how much you can learn about a culture from what it throws away. They allow her into their backyard workshops, share their struggles with a hostile government, and reveal the secret of their happiness in the midst of Cairo's filthiest slum. The Egyptians refer to Cairo as Um-Ad-Dunya - the Mother of the World. It is home to 22 million people, and over 60% of the city has developed in a completely unregulated free-for-all. As a result many neighborhoods are extraordinarily dense, leaving little room for schools, hospitals, or police stations. Streets are often too narrow for a fire truck or even an ambulance So where do you go if you live in a Cairo slum and yearn to see a tree or two? Al-Azhar Park - built, appropriately, on a garbage dump. For many children, it's their first experience with real grass. It's also a popular retreat for young couples looking for a bit of privacy, despite its proximity to the ultra-conservative Islamic Cairo. The walled city has changed little since Muhammad's time. Children play in its cobble-stoned streets and the air is filled with the smell of freshly baked bread, delivered every morning and evening by an army of young boys. Egyptians eat more bread per capita than any other country in the world. Cairo is justifiably proud of its metro system - one of only two in all of Africa. It's efficient, inexpensive, and - even in the middle of a revolution - never breaks down. Each train has several carriages reserved for women, making it one of the safest forms of transportation in all of Egypt. The metro is the city's saving grace, because the one thing you don't want to do in Cairo is drive. Cairenos are notorious for their creative indifference to the rules of the road. If you miss your exit, it's okay to drive the wrong way down a four-lane highway. If you do arrive at your destination in one piece then you still have to find a place to park. Munadis - self-appointed car parkers - have staked out spots along the city's most congested streets and operate on tips. They even take phone reservations. Of course, the hottest ride in town didn't always come with a steering wheel. Bir'ash, just 35 miles outside of Cairo, still hosts the largest camel market in the Middle East. Like the pyramids, camels are a point of pride in Egypt - a part of their collective heritage. If you're not ready to buy a piece of Egyptian history, you can always pick up a bottle or two of camel milk, smoke a sheesha pipe, and hang out for an hour before the Friday call to prayers. You will never truly understand Egypt if you don't understand Islam, and Ramadan - Islam's holiest month - is the time to do it. To Muslims, Ramadan is Christmas and Thanksgiving all rolled into one. Throughout Egypt, strangers are invited to share Iftar, the breaking of the daily fast. During Ramadan, Muller is given access to life behind the walls of one of Cairo's more conservative mosques, where she discovers an unexpected world of workout gyms and boxing clubs, libraries and theatre groups. There is more to Egypt than Cairo. Hurghada, once a poor fishing village, is now a premiere resort area - a 20-mile-long dense band of concrete on the fabled Red Sea. Unfortunately the explosion of tourism has done enormous damage to the reefs and forced the Bedouin out of their ancestral lands. Some of the more innovative nomads have started using their goats to help sort through and recycle garbage, providing them a crucial new source of income but also forcing them to settle down and give up their thousand-year old lifestyle. Cairo, Undercover reveals the many faces of this complicated land, where a fundamentally kind and generous people struggle to emerge from six decades of brutal dictatorship, fear, and propaganda.

SWEET HONEY IN THE ROCK are Grammy winning folk and civil rights legends who express their history as African-American women through a capella song, dance, and even sign language. Described in the magazine High Fidelity as "breathtaking excursions into harmony singing" and "neck-hair raising" in Downbeat, one is startled at the many musical guises through which the message may appear. WoodSongs is proud to present this Special Event Broadcast from this legacy ensemble as they perform songs from their latest album 'LoveInEvolution'. 11:30PM Katmai: Alaska's Wild Peninsula

A narrow frontier between warm and cold latitudes extends 500 miles from the Alaskan mainland, separating the tempestuous Bering Sea from the Pacific: the Alaska Peninsula, a cloud-cloaked land of active volcanoes, rolling tundra and the greatest concentration of the largest bears on earth. The writings of naturalist Loren Eiseley inspire this cinematic essay on a landscape where bears outnumber people and the sockeye salmon run is the most prolific in the world. At the base of the peninsula lies Katmai National Park, a wilderness larger than Yellowstone and Yosemite - combined. Farther down the peninsula, a giant volcanic caldera emerges on the horizon, so remote that more people climb Everest than visit Aniakchak National Monument. Alaska is warming at more than twice the rate of the rest of the planet. In KATMAI: ALASKA'S WILD PENINSULA, filmmaker John Grabowska profiles the remote Alaska Peninsula and asks how climate change will affect this magnificent land of wilderness and wildlife. 7:00PM Egypt Beyond The Pyramids - The Gathering Storm

Knowing that conflict was brewing once again in Egypt, Karin Muller took a huge risk. She set out to film a documentary on Egyptian life - in the middle of a revolution. For three months, Karin traveled alone from the upper Nile to the Red Sea, sharing the day-to-day lives of ordinary Egyptians. Through the eyes of fishermen and bakers, street dancers and Cairo's kamikaze taxi drivers, Karin discovered a side of Egypt that few foreigners get to see. Karin begins her journey in Upper Egypt, at an unusual Muslim celebration - a birthday party for Luxor's most famous saint. Huge processions fill the streets, but the heart of the festival is its elaborate fruit-filled floats. Fruit fights erupt at every corner, with bystanders hoping to catch a piece or two. For an entire day the locals dance in the street, wearing wigs and masks, their bodies painted blue. Hidden alleyways host bouts of Tahtib - ancient Muslim stick-fighting - and the central square is packed with children's rides, stalls selling toys and comfort foods, and even the occasional illicit gambling booth. But not everyone in Luxor is partying until late into the night. Lucie, a young French archeologist, has spent the last two years in Luxor, learning to speak Arabic and becoming a part of her Luxor neighborhood. Lucie has come to appreciate Egyptian family values and her neighbors have tried - unsuccessfully - to develop a taste for blue cheese. The village men are mostly poor farmers and Nile fishermen, barely surviving despite the government subsidy of wheat and fuel. Once a week the men attend the local livestock market - Egypt's equivalent of a Monday night football game. The bargaining can go on for hours, but after the deal is done everyone shares a cup of tea and a sheesha pipe. The topic of conversation is often Cairo - a magnet for poor rural Egyptians struggling to make ends meet. For those brave enough to make the journey, the odds are not in their favor. Unemployment is close to 30%. The few who do well have found a trade, like the ubiquitous roaming hibiscus tea sellers. In Cairo, the coffee house is the only establishment more common than a mosque. It's a male-only bastion where Egyptians from all walks of life gather to smoke, play backgammon, and argue politics. Revolutions are born in Cairo's coffee houses. Karin spends long evening with university students and local mullahs, piecing together the real story behind Egypt's quest for democracy. While the men are arguing over coffee, the women are usually out shopping. Most Egyptian women wear abeyas - robe-like dresses worn throughout the Muslim world. They may all look the same to Westerners, but there are in fact dozens of different styles. Since the abeya covers everything except the hands and feet, it's not surprising that Egyptian women are obsessed with shoes and handbags, even if they have to buy them in Cairo's second-hand markets. Not everyone in Egypt is struggling to make ends meet. Cairo's wealthier inhabitants can be found at local sports competitions or trying out the latest Western fads and fashions. Break dancing is popular, but the runaway hit in Cairo is Zumba. The women don't seem the least bit shy or inhibited but - even more surprising - neither are the men. Despite their tough-boy image, they're not the least bit afraid of making fun of themselves. Over the past few years, Egyptians, both rich and poor, have developed a new favorite pastime - revolution. For five days Karin lives in the tents in Tahrir Square and captures a uniquely personal view of the fateful revolution that will bring all Egyptians together and then tear them apart. Men and women, old and young, Muslim and Christian - the whole of Cairo turns out in an electrifying time of incredible hope and expectation. Until the military steps in. In a classic coup, they remove the President from power. The Muslim Brotherhood immediately sets up camp in nearby Rabaa Mosque and the stage is set for confrontation. Egypt is suddenly on the brink of civil war. Karin leaves the escalating violence for the more peaceful countryside. But even here rage and fear have infected the population. Muller survived the revolution and military coup, only to be attacked by a spontaneous mob in a remote village in the Nile delta. Seriously injured, she is medevacked back to the States for emergency surgery. Egypt: The Gathering Storm reveals the many faces of this complicated land, where a fundamentally kind and generous people struggle to emerge from six decades of brutal dictatorship, fear, and propaganda.
